PART I: ACCESS TO INFORMATION FROM WRITTEN TEXTS (70 points)

Read the article below and then answer questions 1-7.

THE ACCIDENTAL CAREER OF PHOTOGRAPHER JIMMY CHIN

In August 2003, nature photographer Jimmy Chin was working on Mount Everest when a wall of snow came down and nearly killed him. Though he was thrown 30 meters down the mountain, Chin managed to take some dramatic pictures of the falling ice and snow. They were so good that he was hired to film scenes for a new documentary about the world's highest mountains. Not bad for someone who just five years ago didn't even own a camera.

"I was planning to become a professional mountain climber," says Chin, "but that changed in April 1999, when I was training for an expedition with a friend who works for a magazine. One morning I picked up his camera and took a picture of him in his sleeping bag, just as a joke. He showed the photo to the editor of his magazine, and she bought it!" Chin used the money to buy a camera of his own. Within a surprisingly short time he acquired the necessary technical skills and started making a living as a photographer. His pictures soon appeared in exhibitions and top photography magazines.

Only six months after selling his first picture, Chin was hired to film a climbing expedition to Argentina. There was just one problem: he had to use a video camera, something he had never done before. Again, however, he showed his unusual ability to pick up technical skills, and brought back an award-winning film of the climb. Says Matt Stanley, editor of Climbing magazine, "Chin's exceptional artistic talent enables him to capture the drama in every situation."

Chin's success is based on more than just talent. He is always experimenting and his many fans admire his bold use of new techniques. And he is very happy with the way things have turned out. "I've found a profession that's perfect for me: I get paid for doing the two things I love best in the world."
