PART I: ACCESS TO INFORMATION FROM WRITTEN TEXTS (70 points)

Read the interview below and then answer questions 1-7.

THE COOKIE MASTER

People who eat at Chinese restaurants often look forward to the end of the meal. That's when the waiter brings the fortune cookies. Inside these traditional cookies are slips of paper with "fortunes" printed on them — short messages such as "You will have an unexpected guest," or "Friendship is golden."

To find out how fortunes are written, we went to Wonton Foods, the world's largest manufacturer of fortune cookies. There we spoke to Donald Lu, head of the company's finance department. Strangely enough, until recently Mr. Lu also wrote the fortunes used by Wonton Foods.

Did you ever imagine yourself writing texts for fortune cookies?

Not in my wildest dreams. I studied economics at university and was hired by Wonton Foods as an accountant. Soon afterwards, the managers decided that the fortunes we were putting in the cookies were too old-fashioned. I was asked to write new ones because I had a better command of English than anyone else in the company, not because I had any writing experience.

15 So it must have been hard for you.

Actually, it was easier than I expected. I found inspiration in anything from books and magazines to conversations I heard on the bus. I kept a notebook and jotted everything down. Soon I was writing four or five fortunes a day.

How did you manage to write so many? After all, there's only a limited number of messages that can be expressed in one sentence.

You're right. After about ten years I realized I was repeating myself. For a while I tried looking for new sources of ideas but eventually I gave up altogether.

So where does Wonton Foods get fortunes for its cookies now?

In the meantime we're re-using fortunes we've used before, but we're worried that sooner or later our customers will notice. That's why we're looking for a new fortune writer. Of course, I'll gladly give advice to the person we hire.

Such as?

Well, the first thing I'll say is: "Start thinking in five-word sentences."
